Of Mice And Men: The Role Of Dreams

In this paper, I will clarify why the Americans long for the characters in 'of Mice and Men', we're unachievable. Each character has an alternate dream, yet on the farm, they're viewed as ridiculous, and I'll clarify why.

George and Lennie: The fantasy of George and Lennie was unreachable because of Lennie's psychological and physical inabilities. George and Lennie's fantasy about possessing land is out of reach because of Lennie's indiscreet activities due to the obliviousness of his physical quality. George continually warns Lennie not to fight back whenever hassled. Be that as it may, George knew it was unavoidable that Lennie would act thoughtlessly, and impact their fantasy. This is obvious when George was informed that Lennie has killed Curley's wife.

Statement: “I think I know from the very first. I think I know we’d never do her. He usta like to hear about it so much I got to thinking maybe we would.”

Candy: Candy’s fantasy was like George and Lennie's. Candy's dreams about partaking in George and Lennie's fantasy to abstain from getting desolate, with the help of George and Lennie, was ruined when George killed Lennie. In contrast to George, Candy accepted that the 'American Dream' was inside his range from the inception of the arrangement. Be that as it may, after George killed Lennie, all expectation was lost. This is clear when Candy suspiciously inquired whether he despite everything has the aim to buy the land in the wake of murdering Lennie.

Statement: “I’ll work my month an’ I’ll take my fifty bucks an’ I’ll stay all night in some lousy cat house. Or I’ll set in some poolroom til everybody goes home. An’ then I’ll come back an’ work another month an’ I’ll have fifty bucks more.”

Curley: Curley's significant other's fantasy about turning into an entertainer in Hollywood is unfeasible for the explanation that she has surrendered to an unhappy marriage. She envisions how incredible it is to remain in extravagant lodgings, own a few rich dresses, and have individuals needing to snap her picture. She wants kinship, popularity, and monetary security however her fantasy contrasts with the fantasy of the men. Her marriage with Curley has confined her from collaborating with men and above all, achieving her fantasies.

Statement: ”Coulda been in the movies, an’ had nice clothes-all them nice clothes as they wear. An’ I coulda sat in them big hotels, an’ had pitchers took of me.”

Conclusion: The men in this novel are uncheerful for the others dreams working out as expected.

Never question yourself or your fantasies, in the event that you question yourself and don't accept your fantasies can occur or you can't accomplish something, it won't occur. Nowadays everybody is so hesitant and never have confidence in themself or have trust, however, that requirements to change, if individuals really put the energy into putting stock in them self's, they would succeed, yet everybody is so dubious. The characters in the story didn't accept or regard the other's dreams with the goal that's the reason they felt they couldn't work out as expected. This was my exposition on 'of Mice and Men' .
